Rural Women and Triple Exploitation in Korean Development by D. Gills, Paperback

But the use of popular culture within the Third World to disseminate important information is still in its infancy. Poor rural women utilize a range of technologies in both productive and reproductive activities which are central to their livelihood strategies, especially at the household level. The only question is how? Particular attention is paid to the way women are perceived in these policies, how women are organizing themselves to realize change, what lessons can be learned and what suggestions for alternative strategies emerge. This year the Government-run Relief and Rehabilitation Commission RRC says 4. Young, Gay, Vidyani Samarasinghe and Ken Kusterer Eds.
