Incidental carcinoma of the prostate — Grading and tumor volume in relation to survival rate

One out of every two men over eighty suffers from carcinoma of the prostate. Microscopic sections of both kidneys show features consistent with acute tubular necrosis. Regarding the relative and absolute tumor amounts the morphometric analysis shows as significant difference between A 1 and A 2 lesions.

The Management of Incidental Prostate Cancer Following TURP

Expectant management shows favourable outcomes in patients with low risk disease. The Autopsy Findings At autopsy, the body was severely pale; fragments of clotted blood were seen in his nostrils.

CARCINOMA OF THE PROSTATE

The role of TURP in the detection of prostate cancer in BPH patients with previously negative prostate biopsy. A cause of accelerated metastatic growth. This rare case of DIC should be considered especially in elderly men when no other cause can be found for coagulopathy.

Incidental Carcinoma of the Prostate: An Analysis of the Predictors of Progression
