If a paper that had a clear, precise solution to say colon cancer, with a large study and impeccable research standards, would a journal publish such a study? I do see the point of offering an alternative pathway for publication, and worthwhile papers do appear in open access journals but given that there is a financial incentive to publish regardless of quality and evidence of poor or nonexistent referee processes it is not surprising that questions have been raised. Overall, our objectives were to i map the physical and chemical properties of global surface soils and ii determine the linkages between surface soil properties, climate and biota at the global scale.
