The United Irishmen Rebellion

In a little time the French fell down, offering up their arms and, as our men advanced to receive them, they treacherously arose and fired on our unguarded men, and then fell again on their knees. There they were confronted by a vast, numerically superior, Redcoat army under the command of Lord Cornwallis.

The great Roger Casement wrote that Humbert was 'eternally disgraced' by what he did at Ballinamuck. They skirmished with elements of a Zulu force which Chelmsford believed to be the vanguard of the main enemy army. During the fighting, four members of the IRA party worked their way around the flank of the Auxiliaries, killing their commander, Lt.
