probability of some avoiding the horror of the absent clergyman.

The Cree, has, of course, much in common with other languages, but it has also many peculiarities which the Archdeacon expounded clearly and satisfactorily. But he had to go to England for consecration, and on the 28th of October, 1857 St. These discussions have caused much uneasiness to reflecting Churchmen, and lovers of moderate counsels, not only because they give our adversaries an occasion of misrepresenting and speaking evil of us, nor only because they have given birth to divisions among those who are servants of the same Lord, and ministers at the same altar, but because those divisions have encouraged a tone of feeling and language not well calculated to strengthen that bond of peace, and to promote that unity of the Spirit with which we, who are ambassadors for Christ, should keep the faith, and hold fast that good thing that has been committed to us.
